The Kabukiza in Tokyo's Ginza district was reconstructed recently and reopened in April 2013.

Kabuki is a classical Japanese dance-drama. Kabuki theatre is known for the stylization of its drama and for the elaborate make-up worn by some of its performers.

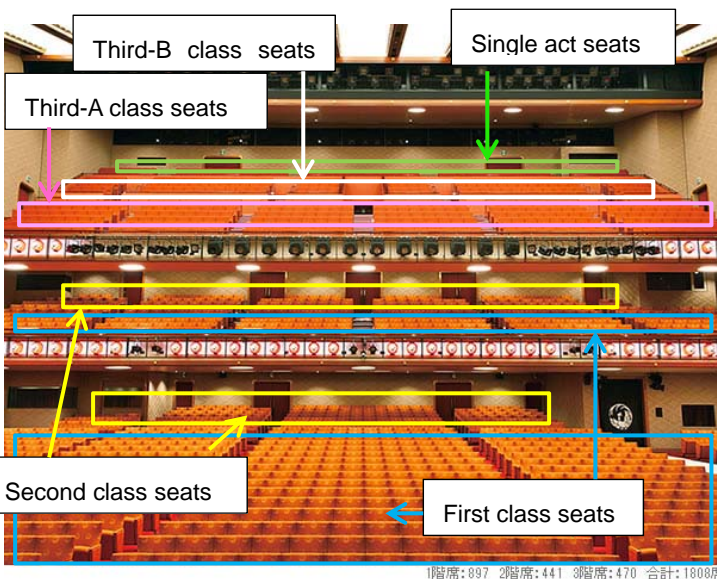

Formal dress code is not required when attending a kabuki play, although decent dressing and footwear are recommended. Sometimes, often on the first day of a run, some ladies dress in traditional kinomo.

These days, kabuki plays are most easily enjoyed at selected theaters with Western style seats. A day's performance is usually divided into two segments (one in the early afternoon and one towards the evening), and each segment is further divided into acts. Tickets are usually sold per segment, although in some cases they are also available per act. They typically cost around 2,000 yen for a single act or between 4,000 and 20,000 yen for an entire segment depending on the seat quality. Single-act tickets are only available on the day at a dedicated ticket window, while regular tickets can be booked online in English.
