Largest Wholesale Market in Japan

The Tsukiji Market is separated into two main areas: the Inner Market (Jonai Shijo) and the Outer Market (Jogai Shijo). The Inner Market is the wholesale market for the professionals, and that is where the fish auction takes place. The Outer Market, featured in this brochure, retails some of the fresh seafood and vegetables sold in the Inner Market. Primarily, both markets cater to the professionals, but the Outer Market has recently opened its doors to visitors.

Important Guidelines:

1. Cars, trucks and turret trucks are used to transfer merchandise within the market. Please give them priority and stay out of their way. Your safety is our main concern. (Please be extra careful when you are taking photos...watch out behind you!).

2. The Tsukiji Market people pride themselves in providing fresh food to their customers. When fresh fruits, vegetables and raw fish are handled by visitors, the merchandise lose their freshness.

3. People aren't used to bargaining in Tokyo. It is not part of their culture. If you press, you may end up offending the store owner!

4. Restaurants in the Tsukiji Outer Market tend to be small with limited seating. Sometimes even lines form outside. Depending on the time of day, you may have to keep up with the eating pace of the locals.

Access : 1- minute walk from Tsukiji Station.

http://www.kabuki-bito.jp/eng/top.html

The Kabukiza in Tokyo's Ginza district was reconstructed recently and reopened in April 2013.

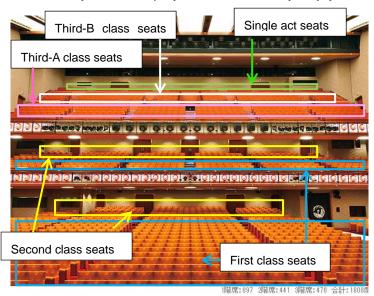

Kabuki is a classical Japanese dance-drama. Kabuki theatre is known for the stylization of its drama and for the elaborate make-up worn by some of its performers.

Formal dress code is not required when attending a kabuki play, although decent dressing and footwear are recommended. Sometimes, often on the first day of a run, some ladies dress in traditional kinomo.

These days, kabuki plays are most easily enjoyed at selected theaters with Western style seats. A day's performance is usually divided into two segments (one in the early afternoon and one towards the evening), and each segment is further divided into acts. Tickets are usually sold per segment, although in some cases they are also available per act. They typically cost around 2,000 yen for a single act or between 4,000 and 20,000 yen for an depending entire segment on the seat quality.Single-act tickets are only available on the day at a dedicated ticket window, while regular tickets can be booked online in English.
